A LETTER TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

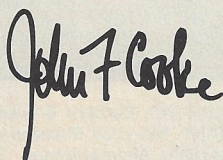

ON THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, The Disney Channel presents a very special evening of entertainment, complete with the world premieres of two original programs: the third annual Disney's Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra special at 7:00 p.m. Eastern/Pacific time, followed by Discover Magazine's 5th Annual Technology Awards at 8:00 p.m.

If you've seen our two previous concerts, you'll know that Disney's Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra is delightful. For new subscribers, I can tell you that it's a moving and entertaining musical performance by an orchestra comprising 75 young musicians, all of whom are 12 years old and younger. The program highlights include Prokofiev's Peter and the Wolf, with narration by our special guest, 13-year-old Elijah Wood. (Mr. Wood can be seen on The Disney Channel in The Adventures of Huck Finn.) Appearing as principal soloist with the orchestra is Christopher Falzone. Christopher, who is eight years old, won our first national piano competition, which was held in conjunction with the program. A special thanks goes to The Yamaha Corporation of America, makers of fine musical instruments, which provided partial funding for the show.

Discover Magazine's 5th Annual Technology Awards pay tribute to the important roles creativity and technological advancement play in our society. Penn & Teller host the program, which showcases new and emerging technologies and products and also profiles their creators. Penn Jillette has himself served as one of Discover Magazine's judges for prior Technology Awards and brings his unique and mischievous sensibility to the show.

And of course, for the adult members of the family, August and September bring great music specials to Sunday Night Showcase. Jackson Browne not only looks back on a distinguished career as a singer and songwriter but also performs songs from his most recent album in an intimate concert setting. On hand are a few of his friends, including Graham Nash, David Crosby, and Jennifer Warnes. And Sunday Night Showcase presents a music special by one of the hottest artists currently on the scene—a performer who has won an entire new generation of fans. Who is this star? Tony Bennett, of course.

I hope you enjoy our lineup of great programs for August and September.

Start A New Holiday Tradition With THE MUPPET CHRISTMAS CAROL

KICKING OFF THE HOLIDAY SEASON, The Disney Channel presents the world television premiere of a film that's sure to become a perennial holiday favorite: The Muppet Christmas Carol. Joining Kermit the Frog, who plays the humble Bob Cratchit, and Miss Piggy, who portrays Bob's feisty wife, is veteran star Michael Caine as Ebenezer Scrooge. Playing the tale's narrator, novelist Charles Dickens, is none other than The Great Gonzo. Of course, when you have stars of that magnitude making a major motion picture, egos can be a problem, as Kermit acknowledged. "One time on the set," he explained, "Miss Piggy was complaining that she wanted a bigger part. She sort of took offense when Michael Caine said something about her part being big enough as it was." Kermit added that it "would be terrific if this movie became a holiday tradition...like giving gifts, trimming the tree—and trying to get rid of the fruitcake."

The American Legacy AMERICA'S GOLDEN AGE?

Time and nostalgia continue to burnish the '50s to a fine sheen. We'll leave to historians the question of whether that decade was America's golden age or not—but this fall we all can revel in The Fun and Feel of the Fifties on The American Legacy. This lighthearted two-part special is a treasure chest of the most hilarious, significant, seductive, and unforgettable sights and sounds of the decade. From Disneyland's opening day to the birth of rock and roll, from the golden age of television to hula hoops and Barbie, The Fun and Feel of the Fifties celebrates American culture.

Dialogue By Shakespeare

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Kenneth Branagh came to the attention of America with his bravura performance in Henry V—a favorite on The Disney Channel. Now Branagh and wife Emma Thompson (Henry V, Howard's End, The Remains of the Day) return to The Disney Channel in the world television premiere of Much Ado About Nothing, Shakespeare's exquisite comedy that surveys not the battle but the war between the sexes. And this is Shakespeare as you have never imagined it before, with sun-drenched settings and a stunning all-star cast. Joining Branagh and Thompson are Denzel who can explain a quadratic equation? It's just not necessary anymore, at least not for the more than seven million American households that have gone online.

Connecting a home computer to an online service links the family to a wide range of resources, from updated encyclopedias to expert homework help, as well as magazines, study guides, and forums. Kids can play educational games, collect international online pen pals, check the day's science news, and download maps, software or data for reports.

All a family needs, says Mike Darcy, program manager at Prodigy, in White Plains, New York, is a computer with at least a 286 microprocessor or its equivalent, a color monitor, and a 2400- to 9600-baud modem. Online services are designed to be used by the entire family. In fact, most people find that their children—more than 350,000 are online with Prodigy alone—quickly become proficient in using online systems. They often take the lead in exploring the possibilities and then teaching their parents new applications. Prodigy offers episodes of the Baby-sitters' Club, Sesame Street math and alphabet activities, a special news background feature geared to explain world events for kids nine to 14, political profiles on every congressman and senator, including voting records, addresses and phone numbers, a Believe-It-Or-Not Science section with fascinating facts in science, and a host of forums that allow children to ask questions and get answers from people across the country. Students studying World War II, for example, can hear from veterans who were there, and can incorporate their first-hand accounts into their reports, says Darcy. Subscribers to The Disney Channel will also find programming schedules and highlights on the service.

America Online, a service based in Vienna, Virginia, offers study guides, Compton's Encyclopedia, Homework Help (which offers academic assistance), and Teacher Pager, which gives children almost immediate help with homework from teachers and tutors. There are also CNN Afterschool Chats (geared for latchkey children), kids newsletters, and over 50 different clubs for those with interests ranging from astronomy to writing.

Margaret Ryan, communications specialist with America Online, says many of the online services stimulate children's writing and communications skills and can help them learn to gain access to high-tech resources. Yet despite all the benefits of online access, Ryan encourages parents to monitor their children's use of the computer just as they do the telephone and television.

Online software runs between no-cost and $39.95, and online services charge a monthly fee, which ranges from $8.95 to $14.95, depending on the firm—and there are additional hourly fees as well. (Most online services are compatible with both DOS and Macintosh.)

Online services are expanding constantly and offer a variety of features for adults, too: stock, bond, mutual fund and securities quotes; data-bases; wire services; international weather maps and reports—and shopping.

For some families, online services offer quick insight into the multi-dimensional Information Age of the next century. At the very least, the features pre-empt frantic trips to find research for tomorrow's report...or answers for that math problem that's just too tough for parents to solve.

For more information about going online, call: America Online (800) 827-6364; CompuServe (800) 848-8199; Prodigy (800) 776-3449.

Development MAKING MUSIC MEANINGFUL

On August 25, The Disney Channel presents the world premiere of the third annual Disney's Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra special. Featured as a soloist in this year's concert is eight-year-old pianist Christopher Falzone, who won the program's National Piano Competition. Which leads to the question: When should children start music lessons?

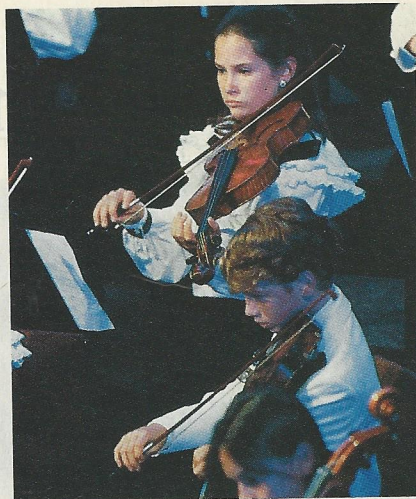

The sooner the better, say the experts.

Louise Behrend, a teacher at the prestigious Julliard School in New York, says even two-year-olds can benefit from general music and motion classes. By three, children can begin to use kid-sized violins and cellos, especially if they are learning by the Suzuki method.

According to Behrend, the argument is simple: If children learn language early, why can't they learn music? In fact, it may be more important to develop an ear for the sounds and rhythm than to focus on identifying notes.

The key is to help the child find the right instrument. Behrend recommends exposing students to violin, piano, and cello. "If, however, a child has a very definite leaning to a given instrument, that should be respected," she says.

Even children who are drawn to music sometimes find the prospect of practicing frustrating. Behrend recommends encouraging very young children to practice for only five minutes at a time, perhaps six times a day. As children mature—between ages four and six—they can handle up to an hour of practice broken up into short sessions.

The key is that the parent must actively supervise the children's practice sessions, at least until they are about eight-years-old. If the parent can help coach the children in tackling the assigned practice exercises and pieces, they will benefit. Audiotaping or videotaping the lesson can prove a helpful adjunct to a child's practice sessions.

Behrend warns that there are certain stages when children may balk at the idea of regular practice. Sometimes diminishing interest is caused by the sheer fatigue of a long school day or by competing activities, or it may be a developmental growth stage—such as adolescence—when nerves are on edge. But Behrend believes it is up to the parent to inspire the self-discipline to continue. "The parent who says, 'I don't want to push my child,' makes a mistake."

One way to re-charge kids about their music lessons is to offer them a regular outlet

Growing a Garden

KIDS LOVE DIRT. They also adore watching plants grow and studying the wildlife—worms, caterpillars, butterflies, and even snails. Whether you opt for a simple flower garden or a full-scale crop of vegetables, there are many fun and appealing garden gadgets for children:

A gardening set designed for children four to 12 with woven palm hat ($18; not shown) and a tool set replete with a durable steel wheelbarrow ($45), both from the Smithsonian Catalogue; (800) 322-0344. Kids Gardening, by Kevin Raftery and Kim Gilbert Raftery (Klutz Press, 1989), comes with a sturdy green trowel and ready-to-go seed packets ($12.95), add a small-sized two-litre red watering can ($14), both from Smith and Hawken; (800) 776-3336. And the Butterfly Garden Kit ($19.95) has a mail-away coupon for butterfly larvae, which spin cocoons; the kit develops into a cardboard viewing box; for ages six and up, from Hearth Song, (800) 325-2502.

THE EYES HAVE IT

According to the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Academy of Ophthalmology, school age children should be screened annually for visual acuity and other ocular functions. Fall is the ideal time for a child's eye exam, since vision problems can quickly make learning challenging. For a free copy of "Your Child's Eyes: Guidelines for Parents" write: American Academy of Pediatrics, Division of Publications, 141 Northwest Point Blvd., P.O. Box 927, Elk Grove Village, IL 60009-0927.

for performance. Performance typically makes the drudgery of practice seem worthwhile. "Music shouldn't be a solitary activity," Behrend says. "Music should have a social aspect." Behrend also encourages parents to expose their children to great music, at home and at concerts. "It's not a frill. Music is a crucial part of a person's education. It's the one area where body, mind, and emotion all come into play."

Challenges RUNNING SHORT

ASK ANY PARENT: the worst thing about sending the kids back to school is that dreaded early morning rush hour.

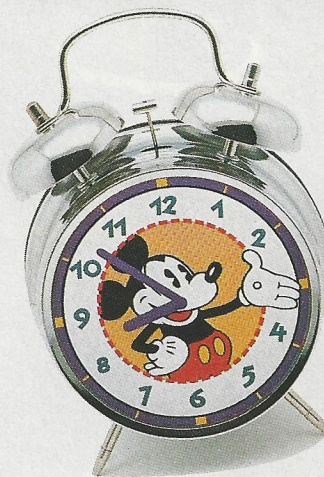

Getting everyone ready and out of the house is a challenge for even the most organized of families. A bad start leaves parents and kids grumbling and frustrated, but a relaxed, smooth start has exactly the opposite effect.

According to Ann Gambrell, president of Creative Time-Plus, in Torrance, California, the best way to ensure an organized start in the morning is to set the alarm to ring 15 minutes earlier than usual. "Fifteen minutes is like an hour in the morning, and just that extra time will take all the pressure off," she says.

Having a few extra minutes can make a huge difference in personal outlook on the day. Gambrell also encourages parents to prepare a master checklist for their children and attach it to a bathroom mirror or closet door. The list—which the kids will eventually incorporate automatically into their routine—should include everything necessary to get them out the door, from brushing teeth to packing a lunch.

The establishment of a regular routine is important, says Odette Pollar, director of Time Management Systems, in Oakland, California. "Especially for young children, the more you can routinize, the more automatic the steps will be."

For children who balk at the demand to make reasonably-paced progress, Pollar suggests a reward system. For example, a child who manages to be completely ready at the appointed time for an entire week can earn an extra trip to the park or a special treat.

Pollar also recommends that parents and children do as much as possible the night before—make lunches, sign school papers, lay out clothes, and get backpacks ready.

Gambrell keeps a wicker "to go" basket by the back door and plops into it anything she needs for the next day.

Once out of the house, one mother puts a favorite family tape on as soon as everyone is in the car, just to give the day the best possible spin.

Because the average family crams so much into most week days, Pollar encourages parents to make an effort to consciously relax the routine on the weekends. Sleeping in, having a lazy breakfast—this makes the hurry-up weekday mornings a bit more bearable.

Together GOOD HUMOR

Raising kids in the 90's can get pretty intense.

That's why author Denise Chapman Weston, a play therapist and consultant based in North Attleboro, Massachusetts, encourages parents to use humor as they cope with children's ups and downs.

"In many ways, kids and parents are in a constant power struggle. Humor is one of the best techniques to diffuse that tension; it lifts the spirits in so many ways," says Weston, co-author of Playful Parenting (Jeremy P. Tarcher, 1993, $14.95).

Humor, appropriately applied, takes away the pressures of guilt, blame, embar-

FALL COLOR HOTLINE

EVERY YEAR, thousands of travelers make the pilgrimage to New England to see the brilliant fall color. Specific information on the best spots for the brightest color is available by calling the Foliage Hotline, (802) 828-3239. The message is updated twice a week during the fall, with information from 17 foresters throughout Vermont.

FADS FOR FALL

ACCORDING TO ANDY Costello, buyer at Sears, Roebuck and Company, in Chicago, fall fashion can be summed up as "modified grunge"—lots of plaid and flannel knee-length shorts worn long after warm weather has passed. There will be lots of layering, topped off by Converse black and white tennis shoes with white laces. While boys' wear will still be long and loose, girls will want things shorter.

Robert Durell/LA TIMES

rassment, and discomfort. "My fondest childhood memories are of the joking we did around our family table—it built my sense of person," Weston remembers. If parents can use humor appropriately, they are actually teaching their children to live a healthier life, Weston adds.

Sometimes all it takes is something silly. Weston suggests, for example, that parents combine a kid-safe body lotion with glitter, creating a magical creme.

When a tantrum occurs, she rubs the lotion on the child's hand, saying, "Here's some magic creme. You have so many crankies in you, this will help." The hand turns glittery, and the child stops screaming in amazement.

Using the lotion breaks the cycle of struggle that the tantrum represents and creates a chance to redirect the child, says Weston.

When Weston noticed her children were becoming a bit aggressive with each other, she set aside one day for the "Gentle Olympics." Medals were awarded to the kids who were kindest to each other.

However, when using humor with children, there are some caveats, says Patricia Corrigan, a family therapist in Thousand Oaks, California. Parents should avoid teasing, since children can take it very seriously. Laughing good naturedly at the klutz in the family can reinforce the behavior.

Corrigan also warns parents "not to try to jolly children out of a feeling. There's a fine line between cheering people up and inadvertently teaching them to laugh everything off."

Still, Weston encourages parents to use humor as a communication tool, teaching children that life and its lessons can be eased through fun and games.

KEBAB SANDWICHES

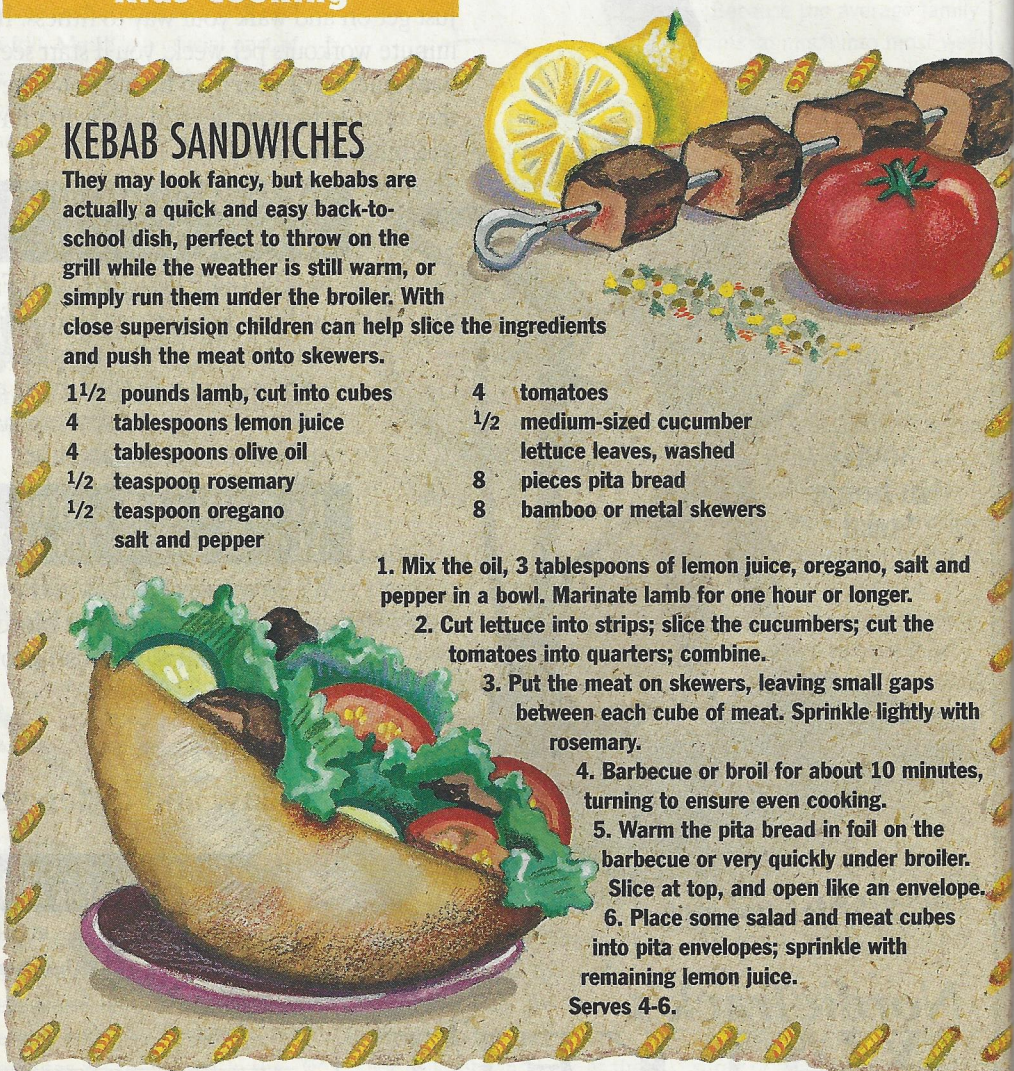

They may look fancy, but kebabs are actually a quick and easy back-to-school dish, perfect to throw on the grill while the weather is still warm, or simply run them under the broiler. With close supervision children can help slice the ingredients and push the meat onto skewers.

1 1/2 pounds lamb, cut into cubes
4 tablespoons lemon juice
4 tablespoons olive oil
1/2 teaspoon rosemary
1/2 teaspoon oregano
salt and pepper

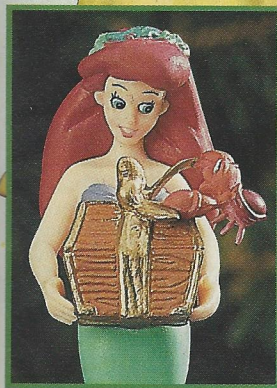

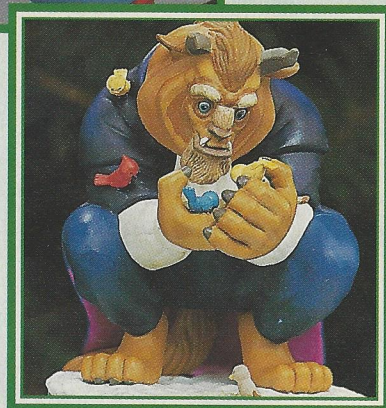

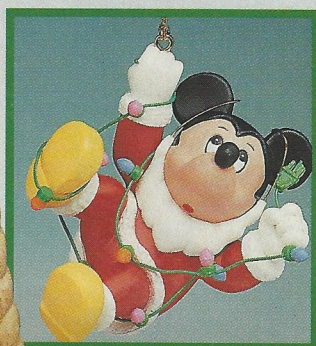

4 tomatoes
1/2 medium-sized cucumber
lettuce leaves, washed
8 pieces pita bread
8 bamboo or metal skewers

1. Mix the oil, 3 tablespoons of lemon juice, oregano, salt and pepper in a bowl. Marinate lamb for one hour or longer.
2. Cut lettuce into strips; slice the cucumbers; cut the tomatoes into quarters; combine.
3. Put the meat on skewers, leaving small gaps between each cube of meat. Sprinkle lightly with rosemary.
4. Barbecue or broil for about 10 minutes, turning to ensure even cooking.
5. Warm the pita bread in foil on the barbecue or very quickly under broiler. Slice at top, and open like an envelope.
6. Place some salad and meat cubes into pita envelopes; sprinkle with remaining lemon juice.

Serves 4-6.

A Harmonic Celebration With Jackson Browne

In his Going Home special, the global-strolling troubador performs in an intimate concert setting and looks back at a distinguished body of work.

By Mr. Bonzai

Photography by Julie Dennis

HERE IS "HOME" FOR A GLOBAL-STROLLING TROUBADOR who has touched the hearts and minds of countless peoples around the world? Jackson Browne has enchanted heads of state and small town folks. He's inspired the hopes of a few tumultuous decades. And his message remains strong and vibrant in the spirit of a newer age.

For Browne, this Going Home music special brings together inspired friends and great musicians for an evening of rockin' poetry and harmonic celebration. Sit back and enjoy your own box seat at a semi-private musical event—an engagement that is both an exploration of new songs and a look back at a body of work that continues to gain in resonance over time.

Join Browne and colorful characters David Crosby and Graham Nash, who lend their angelic harmonies to the poetry of "Lives in the Balance." Browne looks around his theater in the round, a Hollywood sound stage artfully arranged for this Disney Channel special. In his endearingly self-conscious way, Browne acknowledges the pleasure of playing "with my best band and great people I've worked with in the past."

This intimate concert does feature a mighty tight band—with special cameos—working overtime on every tune. Turns out it was Browne's birthday that night, and chanteuses Jennifer Warnes and Valerie Carter provide the icing on the cake. A real treat is the accompaniment of guitarist David Lindley, who helped define the memorable Browne sound. Lindley also pulls out a wild assortment of fiddles, mandolins, bazoukis, and other esoteric stringed instruments that amplify the global nature of Browne's repertoire.

Scenic backdrops are filled with billboard-sized landscape paintings reminiscent of Browne's memorable album covers. Cameras pan across sofas and overstuffed easy chairs filled with such friends as Bonnie Raitt enjoying the acoustic electricity of a Jackson Browne concert. The soft light of Tiffany lamp shades illuminates this gathering of fans and friends, a couple hundred insiders dressed in lace and jeans, cowboy boots and wingtips.

From the opening chords of Browne at the piano, you breathe easy. With the choice words seemingly suspended in the air, we move gracefully through such classics as "Farther On" and his first hit, "Doctor My Eyes." Then step into the present with the title song from his new album "I'm Alive." Yes, Jackson Browne is very much alive and better than ever.

For a greater perspective on Jackson Browne, let's go back to his beginnings. Raised in Southern California, Browne briefly moved to New York in 1967 and was quickly recognized for his distinctive songwriting. Among the artists who recorded his early work were Nico of Velvet Underground fame, Johnny Rivers, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, and Tom Rush. Browne's own first album appeared in 1971 and proved an immediate popular and critical success, propelled by the compelling tune "Doctor My Eyes."

Browne also contributed his talents to a new band called The Eagles, co-writing their first hit (with Glenn Frey), the country-rock anthem "Take It Easy." His own version of the song appeared on the 1973 album For Everyman. Late for the Sky in 1974 further enhanced Browne's reputation for writing articulate and passionate lyrics, and by 1976, The Pretender broke through to Billboard's Top Five. Running on Empty, Browne's brilliant concept album about life on the road (recorded in various situations: onstage, on tour buses, in hotel rooms) hit number three in 1978. His follow-up, 1980's Hold Out, made it all the way to Number One.

If Browne's albums since have not achieved that pinnacle in terms of sales, they have proved no less provocative. Lawyers in Love (1983), Lives in the Balance (1986), and World in Motion (1989) each displayed a deft mixture of songs dealing with love and politics. Few artists have been as vocal on issues ranging from nuclear power to Central America—and Jackson Browne continues to perform countless benefits for numerous causes, big and small.

Our first glimpse of Browne in the '90s is his latest milestone, I'm Alive, an album that draws an honest, heartfelt portrait of the artist today. This time around, politics take a back seat as Browne explores uncharted realms of his heart and soul once more.

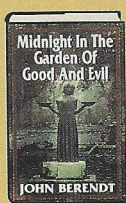

After a self-imposed recording hiatus, we learn what Jackson Browne's been up to in the interim. "Writing, living a life," he confides. "I actually thought I was going to be quicker, but for me, it's a process of figuring out what to talk about—and there is a certain amount of personal excavation into your own psyche and what matters. Especially when the world is changing so much, you know? I'm also not very good at integrating my creative life with other pursuits—parenthood, for instance. And by the way, parenting is very creative, too."

Sound familiar to baby boomers who have become the guardians of the next millenium? Is life more complicated now than it was in the '60s? And you younger viewers—can you imagine being your own parent? "But there is only so much of you to go around," Browne continues. "The simple answer is that I'm lazy, and I work slow, and I have high standards that I sort of meander toward."

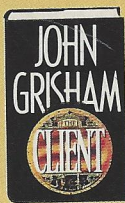

You'll appreciate those high standards in this special presentation of great renditions of such Browne classics as "The Pretender," "Running on Empty," "Before the Deluge," "Everyman," and "In the Shape of the Heart." Bringing us full circle to the poet in the '90s are Browne's emerging standards "Too Many Angels" and "My Problem Is You" (created with producer Don Was, who has worked with such talents as Bonnie Raitt and Willie Nelson).

Many of us feel as if we have grown up with Jackson Browne, using his songs to help define our lives. When asked how we are doing, Browne laughs softly. "You mean as a generation?" he replies. "Well, I have a lot of friends who are older than me, and a lot of friends who are younger than me. And I have a lot of strong relationships with a number of children of varying ages. I think about who is here now." And how is Jackson Browne doing? He laughs again, more heartily, and admits, "I'm alive."

DAVID FROST & THE ENIGMATIC MR. NIXON

© UPI/BETTMA

IF NIXON HAD KNOWN how the interviews would proceed, he would never have agreed to participate," says Sir David Frost of The Nixon Interviews with David Frost. First broadcast in May 1977, Frost's encounters with former President Richard Nixon occurred almost three years after Nixon had become the first American President to resign his office.

"The interviews became, in effect, the 'Trial of Richard Nixon,' the trial that America never had," Frost continues, "and they brought about a tremendous catharsis." This in turn allowed for a most astonishing comeback: Richard Nixon, having reached a political nadir, was to be elevated in a few years to the role of elder statesman, the wise man consulted and praised by later Presidents, including President Clinton, for his advice on foreign affairs.

"The irony," Frost explains, "is that on the one hand Nixon admitted far more than he ever planned to admit; on the other hand the fact that he did admit it was later his ticket back."

When Frost recalls the interviews now, the scale and risk of the whole enterprise stagger him. Negotiations were protracted; many people pronounced the project impossible: Nixon would never agree to surrender control of the interviews to Frost. When looking for advertising sponsors, Frost was continually rebuffed. "Half of the companies approached wouldn't have anything to do with Nixon," he recalls, "and the other half were trying to make people forget they ever did."

When Frost finally did sit down with Nixon—after both men had assembled teams of aides, advisers, and researchers—the first session ran two and a quarter hours, "far longer than I've ever talked continuously with anyone in front of the camera. And this was only one-twelfth of the proceedings. Mind-boggling." The resulting interviews were a condensation of 28 hours of face-to-face talk.

The two men were not strangers: Frost had interviewed Nixon during the 1968 presidential campaign and had hosted a Christmas program at the White House in 1970. Frost acknowledges that, in his bid to interview Nixon, his Englishness gave him an advantage, "a sense of independence and fair play." Unlike his American colleagues, he had not appeared nightly on the news, plumbing the deepening crises facing the Nixon administration: the illegal wire taps; the burglaries; the enemies list; the doomed coverup of Watergate that would lead to the administration's unraveling.

"Nixon probably thought it would be a talk show," says Frost. "He underestimated the amount of research I would do." The two clashed during many sessions. On the subject of Watergate Frost assumed the role of prosecutor—the "Grand Inquisitor" Nixon called him—while Nixon staunchly defended his record.

On the subject of Watergate Frost scored heavily when he quoted the statute on obstruction of justice, following a challenge by the former President, who, though a lawyer himself, did not know the statute. Then when Frost read line by line from the conversation with John Dean, in which the former President appears to be involved in a plan to buy the silence of the Watergate burglars, Nixon reacted physically—recoiling as if from body blows.

"Nixon realized it had gone completely wrong," Frost says. "And he came prepared to volunteer the next day. It was a question of listening to him and being prepared to push him, rather than attacking him." Frost found his role of Grand Inquisitor changed to that of Father Confessor. Eventually, near tears, Nixon made his own extraordinary admission: "I let down my friends, I let down my country, I let down our system of government."

Not all the sessions were so highly or so fiercely charged. When the conversation turned to areas of justified triumph for Nixon—the rapprochement with China, the SALT talks, the Middle East—Frost had no need other than to provide the setting for Nixon to tell his own story. Frost was particularly impressed at the "hilariously skilled" way Nixon took credit for foreign policy success by portraying himself as the fatherly leader to a rather neurotic Henry Kissinger.

"One of the reasons for our abiding interest in Richard Nixon is the degree to which he is an enigma," Frost says. For example, most interview subjects grow tense on camera—Frost chats with them beforehand to keep them relaxed. With Nixon, the problem was reversed: "In an interview, when he was interested in a question, he was totally absorbed: there was no shyness, no lack of talk." It was off-camera that Frost wondered how to get him to unwind, since Nixon proved almost incapable of small talk. On one occasion, grasping at straws, Frost brought up Brezhnev, whose name had been in the paper that day. Without the shadow of a wink or a smirk Nixon declared—quite seriously—"Oh, I wouldn't want to be a Russian leader. They never know when they are being taped."

But perhaps the greatest surprise for Frost came at the very end, when the two men, who had spent so many close, tense, emotional hours together—at times combative, at times cordial, but always standoffish—came to say their good-byes. The former president had stiffly called his adversary "Mr. Frost." Now Nixon took Frost's hand and addressed him with genuine affection as "David."

A FAR OFF PLACE: A PERILOUS ADVENTURE SET AGAINST THE SPLENDOR OF AFRICA

IN A FAR OFF PLACE TWO TEENS FACE A DANGEROUS AND WONDROUS ADVENTURE WHEN POACHERS FORCE THEM TO FLEE INTO THE AFRICAN DESERT. JOINING THE TWO ORPHANS, PLAYED BY REESE WITHERSPOON AND ETHAN RANDALL, IS A YOUNG BUSHMAN, WHOSE MYSTICAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE WILD WORLD IS THE KEY ELEMENT TO SURVIVAL. A FAR OFF PLACE IS A PERILOUS COMING OF AGE TALE, A STORY THAT IS AT TIMES HARSH AND BRUTAL, BUT ALWAYS SET AGAINST THE TIMELESS VISTAS OF AFRICA. "NATURE WAS ANOTHER CHARACTER WITH A LIFE OF ITS OWN IN THIS PICTURE," SAYS JUAN RUIZ-ANCHIA, DIRECTOR OF PHOTOGRAPHY. FOR RUIZ-ANCHIA, FILMING A FAR OFF PLACE ALLOWED HIM TO EXPRESS HIMSELF IN A POETIC WAY: "I VALUED THE INTENSITY OF

THE LIGHT, THE EXTREMES OF COLOR, AND THE VARIETY OF AFRICAN LOCATIONS THROUGH WHICH TO GIVE THE CHARACTERS LIFE, DRAMA, AND EMOTION." OF COURSE, FILMING A FAR OFF PLACE WAS AN ADVENTURE ITSELF, WHAT WITH MAJOR LOCATIONS THAT WERE A TWO-DAY FLIGHT FROM HOME BASE IN THE U.S., IN A DIFFERENT HEMISPHERE SOUTH OF THE EQUATOR, AND IN TWO SEPARATE COUNTRIES SPACED 2,000 MILES APART. "IT WAS A COMPLEX AND PHYSICALLY DEMANDING FILM," SAYS DIRECTOR MIKAEL SALOMON. AND SALOMON SHOULD KNOW OF WHAT HE SPEAKS—AS A CINEMATOPHILIC HE EARNED TWO ACADEMY AWARD NOMINATIONS FOR HIS WORK ON PHYSICALLY DEMANDING FILMS: JAMES CAMERON'S "THE ABYSS" AND RON HOWARD'S "BACK DRAFT."

THE BEST DRESSED WITCHES OF HOCUS POCUS

WHAT BECOMES A TRIO OF LEGENDARY WITCHES LET LOOSE ON SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS, AFTER BEING BANISHED FOR 300 YEARS? THAT WAS THE CHALLENGE FACING DESIGNER MARY VOGT FOR HOCUS POCUS, THE DISNEY COMEDY STARRING BETTE MIDLER, SARAH JESSICA PARKER, AND KATHY NAJIMY. "I READ MANY BOOKS ABOUT SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS, IN THE TIME OF OUR STORY," SAYS VOGT. "I EVEN READ DIARIES OF WOMEN WHO WERE HANGED AS WITCHES. I WENT ON TO READ FAIRY TALES, AND THAT IS WHERE THE REAL INSPIRATION FOR THE STORY CAME FROM. [DIRECTOR] KENNY [ORTEGA] AND I THOUGHT

THAT THE WOMEN SHOULD WEAR COLORS INSTEAD OF JUST BLACK. WE DECIDED THAT BETTE'S CHARACTER WAS A MEDIEVAL MAGICIAN. SHE DRESSED IN A DEEP VELVET GREEN WITH A PURPLE LINING...WITH STRIPED TIGHTS, LAYERS OF SILK AROUND HER. SARAH WAS MORE LIKE SHAKESPEARE'S OPHELIA, FLOATING AROUND, CHILD-LIKE...HER CLOTHES WERE FLUID, SEXY, LIGHTER. KATHY NAJIMY'S CHARACTER WAS THE OPPOSITE OF THAT. I PICTURED HER AS AN HERBALIST, CONCOCTING POTIONS. SHE WAS DRESSED IN EARTHY COLORS WITH RINGS ON HER BELT WHERE SHE COULD HANG HERBS OR DEAD RODENTS FOR HER MOST RECENT BREW."

with Patricia Romanowski

From the time that she first set a pair of black felt ears atop her brown curls and marched onto the set of The Mickey Mouse Club, Annette Funicello won the hearts of millions of Americans. As the reigning sweetheart of the classic Beach Party films, a Top-Forty singing idol, the "Skippy Mom" of tv commercials, or an inspiring leader in the fight against multiple sclerosis, she has been a beloved star for nearly four decades. Here, Annette Funicello looks back on a remarkable career, giving us a privileged look behind the scenes at some of the most cherished landmarks of our popular culture.
